My dearest darling

We did get here
all right, but we started for the station much later than we meant to because the first taxi
that we got would not take the prambulator.
So the messenger boy
had to go off and get another, and that took nearly half an hour.

In fact we had just telephoned for a private car but we were able to countermand it in time which was as well for it would have cost 10/6.

I should be able to write you an intelligent letter because every one is talking as hard as they can and a lot of the time to me.

I believe the long envelope On His Majesty's service must be your comision. Do tell me if it is.

Please tell your mother

I am so sorry I have not written to her but I simply have not had time yet.

This house is cold after the Strels.

Pantra has just got on my lap which is rather hard to write

Well I may as well
stop, I cant write.

Ever so much love

Ruth
