My own dear one

I'm writing before breakfast again because I am going to London by the 10.30, and I shant have time to write after breakfast, because I am going to have a lesson in washing from Violet. She is going for her holiday this week not next, because if she went next week and stayed for nearly three weeks it would bring us so near the end of July that I should have no time to go to Hawkhurst to help Bridget if she should want me.

I don't think Violet will go away to do war work. I have had a long talk with her about it. And she says she may have to go home to her mother, but she does not want to at all. Of course it is pretty dull for her there there. She says that if she ever went away from baby for a long time she does not know if she would ever get into her again. Because when its not your own child you lose interest when you are away. So the suggestion I have made is that during the winter she should go home twice for a month, and I think that might keep her Mother going. I think Violet thinks it quite a good idea.

There's a lot to be said, I think for not being clever. I think it makes human relationships more easy. If one knows a person is very clever one is apt to make an effort not to give ones self away when with them; and if a person is try not to give themselves away they are usually rather uninteresting. This is a parapost of Olive Kennedy who wrote a long and amusing letter to Bob, who she does not know at all. But she did not think at doing so to you because you have the reputation of being clever, and you are dear. Of course she was wrong. I don't think it's a question of cleverness or not which ^{should} make one afraid to give ones self away with people.

It should be whether the person is full of human love and charitableness & humor, or whether they are stiff & shockable.

When one gets to know people well that is what counts. But as things are now if one is told that a person is clever one says to ones self, mind your ps & qs.
I think this must be because of the classic education of the past.

You had to have a classic education to be called clever & educated. And I think it is very apt to make for narrow mindedness & self satisfaction.

You may guess from this that if we ever have a son, & I want two or more, that I shall be very much opposed to a classical education, unless the child were very keen about it which is not likely.

It's rather depressing to me that you cannot even look forward to have yet. It will be so lovely to have you even for only a few days and to be able to talk to you, oh and have you altogether.

If I hear from Mrs Read to say so I am going to tea with her this afternoon I hope I shall I should like to.

I am going to send you another cake soon, I should think you ought to be about ready for it. I hope you have got the Bazaar cake & the ham by now. I gather that you have not yet had the parcel that I sent to the 15th HAG that had your watch cover in it among other things. If you don't get it soon I will get you another.

I sent a letter from Geoffrey Keynes on to you yesterday. I open those that don't have Please forward on them, because then if they are bills I pay them without sending them to you at all as bothering you.

Its breakfast time so I must stop.

Ever so much love dearest & many kiss on you lips & hair and eyes.

Your very loving Ruth
