

April 23 1917

My dearest Ruth, I had three rather old letters from you yesterday - the latest dated 15th. It's annoying that the mails are so bad both ways, & in spite of all that's going on, I don't see why it should be - still it always is. You seem to be answering letters while I wrote 3 to 4 weeks ago. As to these great operations North & South, we hear very little about them - nothing now for several days although the weather has been favourable. It looks as though the French attack were expected where it was planned much more than our own <sup>before</sup> and considering what wonders they have achieved, I'm rather disappointed so far. But we're no right to judge yet - it's no use trying to.

I had a wonderful letter from Polly with yours last night - after reading about 3 pages I got to the answer to my questions about her father. It appears that he has had two bad strokes & is partly paralyzed - there's nothing very wonderful about that: but it is surprising to learn that he has married again. A very sensible & strong-minded thing to do under the circumstances ; evidently he didn't want to live with Polly but it became necessary to have someone to look after him. The new wife is an old friend ; he lives in her house & she is practically his nurse. But what a world it is in which a semi-paralytic of over 80 years finds it necessary to marry in order to make this friend's arrangement. Poor man ! he didn't like to make it known publicly. Polly seems quite calm about it & has no false sentiment as far as I can make out about her relations with her father, whom she neither knows nor loves & she couldn't like him. But she refuses to let the new lady Jenkins in her house ; her father pays her periodical visits. A funny business altogether. I'm inclined to think Polly is insane — I don't know exactly what that means ; but she has an abnormal capacity for creating & living in false worlds. It's better is in her most garrulous mood ; I suppose she can write at a tremendous speed & never has occasion to stop & think - well, there's something to be said for just chipping along like a lark. Evidently she has created the same bustle of life around her as she did at Godalming - she is nursing; it would be well for her sake if she was could go on another 30 years.

I had a fine day at the O.P. this time & conducted a shot of 100 rounds on some farm buildings, which relieved the monotony. It was too cold to enjoy sitting about in the wool for its own sake, but it was quite good to be there & I spent much time in watching out the distant country. In the evening I picked what I now take to be wild polyanthus & we now have a glass of them in the over oak & our bowl with polyanthus & grape hyacinths which are growing sparsely along a bank near my hut - it looks quite lovely; no flowers could suit it better.

There is a good deal of activity about reconnection just now. Do you remember how I moaned over that at Abbott's last year. I suppose

I shall be victimised again before long. So far the only inconvenience I have suffered is that my servant has given notice, in consequence of his incarceration, that he will be unable to officiate with the vigor for some days - at present he shaves me in bed every other morning - which is almost worth a war!

The sun has really got the better of the wind today - a cool north wind quite warmed up by it; this afternoon has been very pleasant & it looks as though we shall have some warm weather at last. I saw some daffodils out this afternoon a Littleton has found a little cache of shrubbery which we shall cut tomorrow. Talking of food - I never told you how much we appreciate the cream - do send some more one of these days. And you ask what substitute <sup>you</sup> shall send for sausages - but please go on sending them as long as possible - they are so good. I have ordered two pipes from Cambridge & told them to send to the bill - also I recently had some things from Holden & I'm no doubt there will be something to pay for them. Can't you

Sometime send me something for my hair which inclines to save fires - "Dantevine" I'm told is good, & my barber servant says I might try have dry-shampoo mixture, which is a very good idea out here where it is difficult to wash one's head.

The battery is all together now. Wood is sleeping with me at present in Dunbar's place - of which I'm glad. The effect of dispelling Dr. habitual clouds of gloom becomes wearisome.

We seem to have settled down here for a bit - a pleasant change, & the Hun is fairly quiet
- I suspect he has withdrawn some guns to repair his losses elsewhere.

Post-time approaching. Darling, I wish we all meet in this region of the spring.
Under the malus floribundus for choice (tiny it will want another month I suppose) or among the cyclamens & anemones of the Apennines or in some old palace garden of glorious Rome
- and it would rain kisses.

Yours loving George.
