

My own Dearest

It's real spring weather at last. Not sunny but most beautifully mild and soft and one can feel that every thing must grow. I have been in the garden with the babies. Violet was there too she brought Diana out. She is so nice with little children and so sympathetic to them though she is quite strict when necessary.

I can be sympathetic but I do hate being strict and the worst of it is that I hate most of all being strict to Clae.

I have just packed you a parcel of soap tablets, chocolate, The Round Table, War + the Future and your mackintosh cape minded. Sometime when you have finished War + the Future you might send it back, it seems a pity to throw it away & I know Basile would like it best to her. I have paid for the New Europe's that you have had & for six months more of them. When that subscription runs out they are sure to let me know and then I can subscribe again if you still want it.

You have never said if you liked that turned cream or not. I am going to send you another meat at sausages this week end and please try to remember to say if you like it.

I am going to take the moses & babies out for a drive in the pony cart this afternoon. It is such a lovely day that it will be very nice I think.
Oh my dearest I do wish you were here to enjoy the spring with me because you do enjoy it so much don't you.

I often look back with great pleasure on the day we went to Rye & Winchelsea & then on to those lovely woods. It was such a very good day and every thing was so beautiful. I do hope we shall be together next spring.

I was reading last night about the Ottoman Empire and the Turkish atrocities, ^{in the} Round Table ~~meeting~~. What awful beasts people can be. I really think there ought to be a special Hell for those kind of people, a Hell of the old fashioned sort with fire & devils with forked pockeas.
Nothing else seems at all suitable.
Refined kinds of punishment would be no use and to imagine that people can behave in such a brutal way & go unpunished seems impossible. Of course it may just kill their souls but then they ought somehow to know that their souls are dead.

One realises the awful complication of life more every year.

I am so very completely grown up now dear and until you are with me again I shall never be anything else. I expect when you are shall perhaps sometimes because I always do. I do hope you will come back for good soon after the new baby is born then we shall be able to have such a lovely time together

I expect you are enjoying this warmer weather most awfully it must make you so much more comfortable. I feel as though it will last too.

The French seem to have done splendidly again, they have taken so many more guns + prisoners.

Your very very loving

Ruth
