

HERTFORD COLLEGE,
OXFORD.

June 28th

Dear Mrs Mallory,

I don't know whether you remember me - but you once were one of a party at dinner at Les Lauriers in Fernyn Street.

But I must try to tell you how deeply I feel for you in your loss. I never knew your husband intimately, but we were ~~at~~ in College at Winchester together, and I knew him pretty well, and was as fond of him as everyone else who knew him. Honestly and loverbly, I never once heard anyone speak of him except with affection. I last saw him at lunch with Argu-

-hart at Balliol before his lecture, and felt afresh the charm of his personality, so utterly unspoilt by celebrity.

HERTFORD COLLEGE,
OXFORD.

I do feel what it must mean to you to have lost such a man.

If it is any help to you to know how fond all his friends were of him, and how much they admired him, you can know for certain that this is so.

Of course this needs no answer.
Yours sincerely
/ D Denniston
