My own Dear

It's a dark gloomy cold morning. I think cold weather that is gloomy as well is most objectionable. It must be all so much worse for you and that makes me hate it even so much more. Yesterday was cold and horrid too.

We went to the Guildford depot in the afternoon there were very few people there, as we came back we met Mr & Mrs Clutton Brock on the platform. He was feeling very annoyed because someone had just told him that all the trains were those quarters of an hour late. As a matter of fact it was only five minutes late. We got into a carriage with them and then Mrs Langton got in & Hilda and Darcy & then Honor Rendell came. So we had rather a gay journey home. Mrs Langton is always fun isn't she. I don't know what Honor is really like but I always imagine she's intelligent & rather nice. But her manner no certainly is very trying, she giggles & talks rather big, I shouldn't be surprised if its a cloak for shyness, but still someone ought to get her out of it.

It was very nice getting home to a warm fire & having Clare to play with, but it wasnt at all nice when I realised that I should have to turn out and go to the station to meet Olive Kennedy. Her train ought to have come in at ~~8~~ 42 I waited down there till ten past seven & then I got too board & went home. I'm glad I did because the train did not come in till ten minutes to eight.

Will Kennedy, Olives husband seems to be very nice. He talked most interestingly about the French army and ours. ~~as~~ Olive is quite right in when she told me. She said he likes to lecture rather than to converse. If he gets on to a subject he is interested in he evidently talks very well and prefers not to be interrupted too much. I think he talks well enough for it not to matter.

In the Somme battle he was for some time the flanking company to the French and consequently saw a lot of them. He is frightfully keen about them as an army and says they are far the best in the field. When the gain ground in a fight they are able to hold more of it than we are. He says their officers from highest to lowest are better trained and take more pains to be nice to their men. Their head generals will be up in the trenches before a big attack talking personally to his men & enthusing them, instead of finding them an army order from two miles back as ours do.

I have just been out for a good walk with Will Kennedy, no one else seemed to want to go and he did & I'm always ready for a walk or nearly always. He walked decently fast which was a great comfort.
We had a nice talk about all sorts of things. He said it was very wonderful to him seeing his baby Jean the first time since she was a baby.
He says she is not so strong and firm as Clare she can't stand yet nor crawl much but she can talk quite a lot, she has a vocabulary of about 20 words.

I am glad to say that Clare was looking very nice today, her spots seem really better I do hope they keep so.

I took her out in her pram in the early part of the morning. I do just gloat over her she is so lovely & so sweet. All the different soft yellows of her hair are delicious. I am going to smock her a white frock in yellow and I have got her some little yellow shoes. I am longing for another letter from you perhaps it will say more about leave. Bob told Mill that it was stopped but has now started again.

This letter has been a lot interrupted but I couldn't help that.

Desert till the day.

Your very loving
Ruth
