Dearest One

I have not got an awful lot of time for writing to you this morning. First Nurse came into my room and talked to me just as I was going to get up and then I went out for a walk with Maajaie along the Eashing lane as far as the pink cottage. It's a pretty morning and east wind still but bright sunshine.

I had a letter from you yesterday at tea time, a very interesting one. I am glad you happy with the French people. Talking to them on the telephone sounds awfully difficult but I expect your French is getting nearer to the surface & quicker to come by than when you first went out. I am rather thrilled by what you say about the possibility of a staff appointment. I don't a bit want you to try for one if you don't want to but you know

I could not help being very glad to know you were safer and more comfortable. And you would be doing very useful good work. Father thinks with your brains you ought to be put on the staff. You'll be able to do your job wherever you are but I would like you to be in a safe place.

I am the French general view of us is no worse than happy-go-lucky. After all I don't know why it should be. I think we are very down on ourselves, don't you? No seriously do you think they are very much better than we are. You say luckily they don't know the worst of us. I wish you could discuss the military relations of us and the French with me it would be so interesting. I have had a note from Common Sense this morning they say they are very sorry you have not received the paper but they have had some difficulty in getting it through the censor, they are inding back numbers and hope you will get it this time. Do you think you ought to have a paper that finds it hard to get through the censor would be coming here this evening. for one night on her way to Hazelwood I think as regards sickness I am getting along very well. It's not as violent as it was a week ago and not so bad as with Clare. I think I shall manage to keep going pretty comfortably till it leaves off of itself.

I had a really very pleasant evening yesterday in bed. A nice and exciting novel to read about the Wat Tyler rebellion in which the hero kills a vast number of people and all the book goes with him in a most pleasant encouraging way. Nice hot milk for supper & some grapes and biscuits. So you see dear I'm not doing at all badly.
Your parcel of sleeping sack and books has arrived. I shall begin M^{rs} Baitling this evening when I go to bed.

Do you have a French servant too I do wish I could be with you in your little room every day for a little while. How lonely it would be for us both.

I am glad your French Captain and Lieut. understand you when you are humorous I believe you will always find that the large number of English people won't because your humor is not the regulation English sort.
Perhaps its more the sort French people understand.

Can't you give me your present address to write to or see you where you are for so short a time as to make it useless. I shant send any parcels till I know more where to send them.
I sent sausages yesterday to the 40th and said on the outside 'open and use it G Mallory away'. They might have gone bad otherwise

Your very loving Ruth
