July 16 Sunday

My own dearest

Such a nice peaceful Sunday morning I got on so well before breakfast that I had plenty of time to take close into the garden with Father before her bottle. It's a showery day I'm afraid it is getting worse.

Did I tell you that Doris is here for the week end. She is going off to do six weeks favours as a sort of holiday after her work at Oxford.

We heard very good war news again last night. They say that in places we have already got all the second set of trenches. I do think it is wonderful they way we are managing to keep on and not have any serious reverses. I'm simply thrilled by the news of this offensive. I had no idea it would succeed so well. In fact I really expected it would be a failure if it ever came. Well of course it's got to go feather yet ^{a lot} before its a complete success.

What I dont know and want to know very much is How far North at Thiepville how we failed to advance, or is that the edge of our attempt. Its where the advance had got at least well unless we have tried further North & failed altogether.

Mr Powell said that at night the sound of shooting can be heard in London and Harry says they hear it constantly at Dover

You have spoken lately very little about the men you are with. I want to hear more about them. Do you think you will go on knowing Mr Bell after the war or any of the others.

Darling I feel that I wrote you very stupid apology the other day when you complained that I said you were not a Christian. Of course I see that it you believe in Christ's teaching you are, even if you think you think he did not mean that he was divine.

but I think many people would not agree with you though I do.

I don't feel in the least inspired to write to you today so I shall stop for the present and try later or tomorrow. It was because Olive was talking nearly all Monday the time.

Dearest news is so thrilling just funny us already having got into the third line. I am longing to hear from you again, and to know what you have been doing. I wonder if you will move forward presently.

But I have not really seen the papers this morning and I do not know how the North part of the front is getting on. I should like to know if the Germans are feeling really depressed yet. We were never really any the truer, I mean never more thinking we were beaten or ready to make peace. So they may still be hopeful & cheerful, but still I don't quite see how they can be. These papers I suppose have to be shameful by law so to speak. I was just glancing at a U.D.C. pamphlet a few minutes ago which put it into my head. But I don't agree with them do you? Apparently they want us to make peace now and give back all the colonies we have taken and for them to give back what we have taken, but I don't think Germany ought to allowed to be here as she has and to go back to things as they were utterly unpunished except for the awful losses which we have suffered as well as they.

Father thinks that Austria will get tired of it soon and will try to make a separate peace. I don't think that will happen. Austria may get awfully tired but I think the difficulties of a separate peace will be too great, besides it would mean the Magyar who are the ruling lot now would have to knuckle under. I think the war has come now to its most thrillingly interesting part, except the first awful rush. It's very nice t here that we have been using cavalry even if its only across a field.

I'm going to tell you the finish of the affair of George giving ~~the~~ notice.
He has not got the place he hoped for and now he wants to stay and Father won't keep him, quite naturally because he has already promised the cottage and place to Duxburyton, the man he saw and Mrs Duxburyton has arranged to do the washing. I think it leaves George thoroughly well right. Still I can't help being sorry that it should end like that after being here sixteen years.

Violet is coming back tomorrow, I'm partly sorry & partly glad. I shall be able to do many other things that I want to do, but I do love having baby all the time & doing every thing for her. It is very sweet to me.

I want to try and do some more reading and I want to read things that you know well so that I can talk to you about them easily. So I think I shall start reading Boswell's life of Johnson. I have wanted to for some time and I think this is rather a good opportunity then I could read your book and understand it. Also I want to try to get some of the same affection for Shakespeare that you have. I'm not sure I shall manage it, but I must have a try. As things have been lately I cannot do more in the day than baby and my letters and a little needlework in the evening.

We have had to many people here to read in the evening, except the paper a little.

Well this letter must stop because I have others that must be written this morning.
I wonder how many times each day I look forward to you coming back and the war ending. I feel that we have been apart a very long time now, but it must feel far longer to you, you have been through so much more. I want more and more some day to see where you are now, it would make it more real & vivid to me. I wonder if I ever shall.

I was by you last night in imagination as you sat in the map room at a night watch. I wonder if you were there. Your very very loving

Ruth
